CHAPTER 1: THE STORM

$19M

The crosswind surged in, filtering through the apertures in the rotten wood, sounding like a chorus of low moans.

Hugging a beam at the top of the hatch, Mai looked out and her breath stopped. The boat had faced it so ugly that all she saw was an enormous wall of cold, clean water bearing down.

She shut her eyes, opened them again — now the gunwale had crested the wave, the ocean completely vanished.
